

Holding Up the Mirror

Everyone has talents; however, since our own talents are such a natural part of us, we are often blind to them and their value. So that we can truly see our talents and their valuable influence in all of our decisions and actions, sometimes we need another person to “hold up a mirror” for us.

To see your talents “reflected in the mirror,” take an opportunity to share your top five Talent Themes with a person who knows you well.

- Describe your top five Talent Themes to this person.
- Then ask this person to tell you where they have seen your top five themes at work in your life.
- Make notes about the insights you gain from this conversation.